Olin Health Education: REACH Program

REACH is a peer health advocacy program that focuses on promoting a positive campus community that reflects the attitudes, behaviors, and values of a healthy Spartan lifestyle.

REACH is a one-credit academic course typically, but not always, offered in Spring. Students are provided with experiential and didactic learning opportunities on both the philosophies of health education as well as specialized topic areas. At the end of Spring, interested and eligible students will be asked to enroll for 2 more semesters (one-credit each) for the service component of REACH in the next academic year.

For more information or to request an application, e-mail REACH at: msureach@gmail.com.

Dietetics students enroll in HNF 490 in a section designated specifically for Reach advocates. Enrollment requires approval of the Olin health education director, completion of an Application for Independent Study available in the Trout Career Center (106 Trout FSHN Building), and request for an override. The FSHN faculty coordinator for the program is Dr. Lorraine Weatherspoon.
