"Further, of notable importance appears the role of the National Wildlife Refuge, an area of wetlands and swamps upstream of the City of Saginaw, which acts as a sink for almost 10% of the total phosphorous load coming from the upper part of the watershed."