November Grape Meetings -
Own-rooted vinifera
and Other Strategies for Rebuilding Vineyards

Advances in insecticide chemistry have in recent years made possible the control of the root Phylloxera in grapevines with spirotetramat. This has opened up the potential of growing own-rooted vinifera here in Michigan. MSU AgBioResearch has been researching this possibility over the past few years at research stations and with grower collaborators.

Please join us for a discussion of the merits and risks of own-rooted vinifera at meetings for commercial wine grape growers this November. There will be demonstration of collecting, storing, and using hardwood cuttings. We’ll also be discussing layering, creating own-rooted vines in the nursery, retraining winter-injured vines and other relevant and practical topics.
