

Pest management newsletters and email lists

Chris DiFonzo, PhD, MSU Department of Entomology

Below is contact information for the IPM newsletters in surrounding states. Each of the newsletters is available on-line, and most are published weekly during the field season. The web sites contain further information on ordering print versions, if available.

The Chat N'Chew Cafe from the Purdue Agronomy Dept. (arguably the best compilation of articles in the region) <http://www.agry.purdue.edu/ext/corn/cafe/>

Purdue Pest and Crop Newsletter

If you want information emailed directly to you, try AgNet, a free email newsletter that compiles ag related articles from IPM newsletters (including many of those above) as well as newspapers and press releases. The newsletter is compiled and sent out daily by Doug Powell at the University of Guelph, with support of many Canadian government agencies, commodity groups, and agribusiness.

To subscribe to the html version of Agnet, send an email to: listserv@listserv.uoguelph.ca
Leave the subject line blank.

In the body of the message type: subscribe agnet-L yourfirstname yourlastname (for example: subscribe agnet-L John Doe)

AgNet will send you a confirmation email, to make sure you really want to be on the list. You have to click on a web link to activate the newsletter. After that, you receive daily updates and articles on ag related news.
